

African American Architects Biographical Dictionary 1865-1945: Uncovering the Untold Stories of Trailblazing Builders

The history of architecture is often dominated by narratives of white, male architects. However, the contributions of African American architects have been largely overlooked and underappreciated. The African American Architects Biographical Dictionary 1865-1945 is a groundbreaking work that aims to rectify this omission by providing detailed accounts of the lives and careers of 150 African American architects who practiced during this period.

The dictionary is the culmination of years of research by a team of scholars led by Dr. Mark R. Jarzombek, a professor of architecture at the University of Pennsylvania. The dictionary includes architects from all over the United States, ranging from well-known figures like Julian Abele and Robert R. Taylor to lesser-known but equally talented individuals like Ethel Waters and Vertner Woodson Tandy.
