

Boer Journal of Life After the War: A Heartbreaking Account of Loss and Resilience

The Boer War, a bloody and devastating conflict that raged from 1899 to 1902, left an enduring legacy of pain and suffering on both sides. Among the countless lives lost were those of Boer women and children, who were interned in concentration camps by the British. Boer Journal of Life After the War is a poignant and searing account of the experiences of these women as they struggled to rebuild their lives in the aftermath of the war.

The Concentration Camps

The British concentration camps were a horrific chapter in the history of the Boer War. Over 26,000 women and children were imprisoned in these camps, where they endured unspeakable hardships. Disease, malnutrition, and overcrowding were rampant, and thousands died.
