The Roots of Grona Boy Go Zion

The origins of Grona Boy Go Zion can be traced back to the teachings of Marcus Garvey, a Jamaican-born activist and advocate for Pan-Africanism. In the early 20th century, Garvey preached the message of self-reliance, black liberation, and the return to Africa, a concept he referred to as "Zion." His followers established several settlements in Jamaica, including Grona Boy Go Zion, which became a central hub for Rastafarianism.

The History of the Community

Grona Boy Go Zion was initially a relatively small community, consisting of a few families who lived on the outskirts of the village of Black River. However, its significance grew over time as it became a refuge for Rastafari from across Jamaica and the wider Caribbean region. The community adopted the principles of communal living, self-sufficiency, and a deep connection to nature, which became hallmarks of the Rastafarian way of life.

In the 1960s, Groun Boy Go Zion gained international prominence as a result of the popularity of reggae music, which showcased the Rastafarian culture and beliefs to a global audience.
