In 2003, I was forced to flee my home. I spent the next few years living in refugee camps in Chad and Egypt. It was a difficult time, but I never gave up hope.

In 2009, I was resettled to Poland. It was a new beginning for me. I was finally safe, and I was surrounded by people who cared about me.

I started to learn Polish and make new friends. I went to school and got a job. I even got married and had two children.

I am so grateful for the life I have now. I have found love, family, and a home in Poland.

The Brutality of Sudan

Sudan is a country that has been plagued by war and violence for decades. The conflict has displaced millions of people and left countless others dead.

I grew up in Darfur, a region of Sudan that has been particularly hard hit by the conflict. I saw my village burned to the ground. I saw my family members killed. I was forced to flee my home and live in a refugee camp.

The things I saw in Darfur will never leave me. I saw children being killed. I saw women being raped. I saw men being tortured.

The brutality of Sudan is something that I will never forget. It is a reminder of the horrors that war can bring.

The Love and Family of Poland

When I arrived in Poland, I was met with kindness and compassion. People welcomed me into their homes and helped me to get settled.

I quickly learned that Poland is a country that values family. People here are close to their loved ones and they take care of each other.

I have found love and family in Poland. I have met my wife here. I have made friends here. I have created a life here.

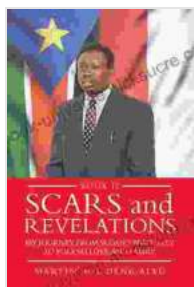

I am so grateful for the love and family that I have found in Poland. It has helped me to heal from the trauma of my past and to build a new future.

My Journey

My journey from Sudan to Poland has been a long and difficult one. But it has also been a journey of hope and resilience.

I have overcome many challenges along the way. But I have never given up on my dreams. I have always believed that I could find a better life.

I am now living proof that anything is possible. If you have the courage to dream, and the determination to work hard, you can achieve anything you set your mind to.
