Daoud Hari's The Translator: Tribesman's Memoir of Darfur is a harrowing and unforgettable account of one man's experiences during the Darfur genocide. Spanning over a decade, from 2003 to 2013, Hari's memoir provides a unique and deeply personal insight into the horrors of war, the resilience of the human spirit, and the power of words.

Hari, a member of the Fur tribe, was working as a translator and cultural broker for the United Nations when the genocide began. He witnessed firsthand the atrocities committed by the Sudanese government and its allied militias, including mass murder, rape, torture, and displacement. Hari's memoir is a powerful indictment of the international community's failure to intervene in Darfur, and a testament to the resilience of the Sudanese people.

The Translator is not an easy read. It is a graphic and often disturbing account of the horrors of war. However, it is also a story of hope and resilience. Hari's memoir is a testament to the power of the human spirit, and a reminder of the importance of fighting for justice.
